FERRIS SCHOOL

Ferris School

Ferris School opened in 1997 and is a secure-care treatment facility that provides services for up to 72 court committed male youth between the ages of 13 to 18 who have been adjudicated by Family Court. Youth committed to Ferris School are identified as serious and/or chronic repeat offenders with a high risk to re-offend, who pose a risk to themselves and others, and require intensive rehabilitative treatment. Youth participate in intensive behavioral management programs in addition to pro-social, athletic, and vocational services.

Education

The Educational Services Unit provides comprehensive educational programs year round which are structured to each child's age, abilities, developmental stages, and grade level. Academic instruction is provided by certified instructors. Special education services and GED preparation are available. Upon completion, educational transition to the youth's school district is supported by the Department of Education. Transition Specialists work with the youth on their return to the community for up to 90 days.

Treatment Programs

Ferris School provides a total structured learning environment that integrates all elements of rehabilitation, education, and treatment at the start of each day. The school offers a behavioral modification approach to treatment through the implementation of Cognitive Behavior Training (CBT). Youth are rewarded for positive behavior and sanctioned for negative behavior. The staff are trained to view every interaction with the youth as a learning opportunity. All programs are evaluated by the Quality Assurance Unit using a standard protocol and measured against evidence-based standards.
